Eligible and appropriate Lucania factors? Hydrocephalus is a condition of the brain that causes an accumulation of cerebrospinal fluid (CSF) in the ventricles of the brain. This fluid buildup can lead to increased pressure within the skull, which can damage brain tissue and lead to various neurological symptoms. The condition is often diagnosed in infants, but it can also develop later in life. Treatment options include surgery to drain the excess fluid and manage the underlying cause. Early diagnosis and treatment are crucial for preventing long-term complications.
